Prince Harry will spend the next two months in California completing his military training.

Prince Harry may be more than 5,000 miles from home, but he still knows how to party.

The 27-year-old royal kicked back with 20 friends – and some Absolut vodka, Red Bull and beer – in San Diego over the weekend at the Andaz hotel's Ivy Rooftop.

At midnight, Prince Harry brought the party poolside, where he and his buddies watched rugby from a private cabana.

Prince Harry arrived in town on Thursday to complete his Apache military training. William's younger brother will spend the next two months at the Naval Air Facility El Centro in California.

The base was used in the Jake Gyllenhaal Gulf War flick, "Jarhead," as well as Tom Cruise's 1986 classic, "Top Gun."

Harry and his fellow officers are allowed off base in their free time, although they are not permitted to cross the border into Mexico.

Las Vegas, however, is a popular destination for British officers halfway through their training.

Once Harry finishes training, he will be assigned to an Apache squadron while he awaits deployment to Afghanistan.
