'Glee' movie showcases Mira Mesa preschooler

So, why was 4-year-old Kellen Sarmiento walking the red carpet Saturday at the Hollywood premiere of "Glee: The 3D Concert Movie," which opens in theaters Friday?

The Warbler choir wannabe from Mira Mesa became a YouTube sensation last June when, wearing a mini red-trimmed navy suit made by his grandma, he parroted a choreographed performance from the hit TV series. Cast members tweeted to fans about the video, and soon Kellen was invited to L.A. by "Glee 3D" producers for an interview. The pint-size singer, nicknamed the Mini Warbler, not only appears briefly in the film and as the credits roll, he also pops up in a TV promo of the movie.

His dad, Mark Sarmiento, says, since age 2, Kellen has displayed a talent for quickly memorizing lyrics and dance steps. Back then, though, he was enthralled with the Black-Eyed Peas.

Although talent agents have called, Mark and his wife, Emily, still haven't decided in what direction, if any, to take their son's budding career.

With more than 2 million YouTube hits logged on the original posting even before "Glee 3D" opens, Kellen's folks probably should wait and see. Kellen, aside from starting a fund for college, seems oblivious to his instant fame. He asks: "Daddy, why am I on TV?"

Seen and heard: On Friday, pop rocker Ryan Cabrera, actor Mario Lopez and swimmer Amanda Beard, a seven-time Olympic medalist, were spotted at a private BlogHer '11 party on Andaz San Diego's Ivy rooftop. No bathing suit for Beard this time. She wore a leopard print floor-length dress, and Cabrera sang ...

Earlier, on the convention center floor, Hock on Mommies blogger Theresa Seid, along with blogger Mary Burt-Godwin, led a surprise flash mob performance by 100 or so mommy bloggers. While seemingly impromptu, the group had practiced their hip-hop routine via virtual rehearsals on Upstream. "Three minutes later I crossed off an item on my bucket list," reports Burt-Godwin, who is planning her second flash mob somewhere in San Diego.
